Summary

Audio Troubleshooting and Future Settings: The meeting primarily focused on troubleshooting audio issues and discussing potential settings for future meetings. Daniel, Curt, constança, and Annie were in attendance. They experimented with different audio settings, including live performance audio and noise suppression, but encountered some confusion. It was decided to stick with the original sound for musicians setting, as it had always been used and seemed to work well. The group also decided to test recording the session for future reference.

Personal Check-in and Audio Testing Session: The group discussed their personal situations and a technical issue related to audio settings. Nerina had to leave early due to exhaustion. They decided to test their audio settings by speaking in unison and adjusting the volume as needed. They also agreed to record the session. Nerina expressed their desire to watch the session while listening, and Daniel assured them that it was okay to leave if necessary. The group decided to take a break and reconvene after 30 minutes.

Incoherent Communication Meeting: The meeting was characterized by disjointed and unclear communication, with statements such as "Who. You" and "Mm. You" being repeated multiple times. The participants, Curt, Annie, Daniel, and constança, seemed to struggle with maintaining a coherent conversation. The transcript does not provide any clear decisions, alignments, next steps, action items, or open questions.

Incoherent Meeting: Unclear Statements: The meeting was characterized by a series of unclear statements, interjections, and exclamations, making it challenging to discern a coherent discussion or decision-making process.

Team Discusses Experience and Decision-Making: The team discussed their recent experience, focusing on their interactions and decision-making processes. They shared personal insights and feelings about the experiment, emphasizing a sense of freedom and lack of contrived decisions. Daniel suggested the possibility of incorporating a segment into a 2-minute format, while constança highlighted the success of a narrower range than initially planned in their experiment. The group also addressed an issue concerning a dog's barking.

Exploring New Musical Directions: The meeting focused on the future direction of the research group's work. Curt suggested focusing on performances and sharing their work with others, expressing interest in exploring non-musical mouth tones. constança proposed a shift towards a practice that could be presented to an audience, focusing on a sequence around musical concepts.

They discussed the exploration of musical drone and the space between notes by a bass player using a fretless bass. The group acknowledged the importance of leadership during performances and the improvisational nature of music. They agreed to continue exploring new musical territories and asked Curt for sonic examples of their discussions.

Online Event, Europe Trip, Artistic Residency: Annie, Daniel, constança, and Curt discussed scheduling an online event and tentatively set the date for March 10th at 9 pm Paris time, which would be 9 am in Portugal. Curt mentioned plans to visit Europe, likely in the first two weeks of June, depending on student enrollment. The team also discussed potential destinations in Europe, including London, Paris, and Berlin. They also considered the possibility of visiting the Gota Institute in Sweden. In addition, the team discussed planning an artistic residency and considered meeting in Brussels due to cheaper flights from Portugal. They also discussed the potential for a public performance at the end of the residency.

Insufficient Information for Summary: The meeting transcript does not provide enough information for a summary. The discussion, decisions, and next steps are not clearly stated.

Next steps:

- Curt will work on getting his email to work before January.
- Schedule an artistic residency in Brussels in June.
